They come, the merry insect train!
The borers and the dippers;
The little giants waltz in again,
And ope the gallipulpers,
The vari-colored ants and flies
That utilize our features,
The bee with penetrating ties,
And sundry sundried creatures.

The weevil and the cutworm now
Do polish up their armor,
The chinch-bug makes his vernal bow
In ambush for the farmer.
The weird curculio setteth out
To mad the fruit tree villers,
And in each garden larks about
Ten billion caterpillars.

The culex pirates agitate
Their understandings furzy,
And move from out the larvæ state
To ambjugate New Jersey.
The beetle dons his working clothes,
The moth is redivivus,
The wasp throws off his attic dose,
And threatens to enlive us.

Ah, yes! The hymenoptera,
The diptera, and so forth,
Hemiptera; orthoptera,
Etcetera, will go forth
Ere long our peace of mind to "roast,"
Our hides to stab and polish
That winging, singing, stinging host
That Congress can't abolish.

THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1891

FRED K. WRIGHT, - - FRANK GONEVERY,
Editor and Proprietors.

SENATOR GORMAN emphatically denies the statement that he is to succeed Colonel Brice in the management of the National Democratic Committee.

JUDGE WHITE, of Pittsburg, has decided that distillers, brewers, wholesale dealers and bottlers, under the act of 1889, are not liable to a mercantile tax as dealers in intoxicating drinks.

AT a meeting of the Democratic State Committee at Philadelphia last Thursday, September 7th was fixed as the time and Harrisburg as the place for the next Democratic State Convention

INGALLS shocked the protectionists the other day when he asserted that "there are ten millions of people in this country out of sixty two and a half millions, that never have enough to eat from one year's end to the other."

SENATOR SHERMAN is opposed to changing the present silver law Why, of course, John is opposed to anything which promises to work injury to the Republican party and endanger the prosperity of his lease as a Senator

SOME people out in Kansas are very outspoken in regard to the Farmers Alliance Ex Congressman B. W Perkins, of that State, says the organization is a curse to Kansas, and that owing to it all improvements have come to a standstill.

THIRTY Republican newspapers have declared positively against Chairman Andrews up to date, and only six stand by him The Doylestown Intelligencer, Wellsboro Agitator, Wilkesbarre Record, Erie Dispatch, Reading Times and Pottsville Miners Journal demand his removal for the good of the party.

MEAT is being smuggled from Canada by well to-do people at Thousand Island Park A. L. Shipman, residing on the Canadian side, was arrested the other day and his boat seized, while trying to smuggle dressed lambs into the Park. There is nothing strange about this smuggling business, a duty on the necessities of life is simply a premium on dishonesty, and serves to create a desire to violate unjust laws

PARNELL met a deserved Waterloo in the Irish election last week, and his followers are greatly depressed in consequence Carlow, the county in which the crushing defeat was sustained, is the smallest county in Ireland, and contains a population of about 45,000 people, and an electorate of about 7,000, of whom 1,000 are Conservatives The battlefield was selected by Parnell and his candidate was defeated by three to one

HON M. F. ELLIOTT has been named as one of the eighteen candidates-at-large to the Constitutional Convention to be selected by the Democratic State Convention Twenty-seven members will be elected at large, each elector voting for but eighteen candidates, and 150 delegates are apportioned to the Senatorial districts, three to each, the electors not voting for more than two The convention of 1873 was composed of 133 delegates, of whom 28 were elected from the State at large, 6 from the city at large and 99 from the Senatorial districts

A FEW days ago some spiritualists at Norristown performed an alleged miracle by turning a glass full of water into wine The over zealous customs officials at Philadelphia determined upon a raid, claiming that Uncle Sam should derive a revenue from the manufacture of such wine The home of the spiritualists was reached and one of the party took an ox swallow of the so called wine It was too much for even the stomach of a Philadelphia high license advocate, and the inspector hurriedly retired from the scene to give vent to his feelings of disgust by yelling "New York"

A CHICAGO dispatch states that the Farmers' Alliance is seeking to compel the payment of corner prices for the 1891 wheat crop An official manifesto, prepared with great secrecy, is to be placed in the hands of every member of the Alliance It urges the farmer to withhold from market a part or the whole of his wheat and to induce his friends and neighbors to do the same until the necessities of consumers will force the payment of prices satisfactory to producers. Comment on this hare-brained scheme of an organization, brought into existence on an anti-trust platform, is unnecessary.

HON. ROSWELL P FLOWER is now looked upon as the next Democratic candidate for Governor of New York He is in every way fitted for this responsible position, and a prominent Democratic paper in Central New York says. "So strong is the sentiment in favor of his nomination that it is a grave doubt whether any other name will be presented for the consideration of the convention. He is always on the right side, and always faithful in his devotion to the interests of the people The State could not have an Executive in whom it would have greater pride and confidence."

DELAMATER is evidently both a hopeful and dishonest young man. The Philadelphia Times says "The Tacoma Ledger reports the presence of George Wallace Delamater in the Puget Sound, Washington country, where the ex-Crawford financier and ex-some-other-things proposes to go into business when his present troubles are adjusted. This is either anticipation in advance of the probable settlement of his multitude of cases in the Meadville courts or it means that his appeal for change of venue was on the fable order. Mr. Delamater is plenty young enough to recover his balance if the chance offers, even though the late depositors in his bank never learn anything more about their particular recovery in the line of balances."

THE Government is now engaged in making experiments with a view to securing rainfalls when needed in arid regions, by exploding balloons charged with oxygen and hydrogen at a considerable height in the air Tests are to be made in the interior of Texas by several members of the Department of Agriculture. Tests will also be made in exploding dynamite attached to the tails of huge kites in connection with the theory that rain may be produced by the concussion of high explosives in midair. The dynamite is to be exploded in the same manner as are the balloons; that is, by a slender wire leading to the kites, and connected with an electric battery [illegible] Congress $5,000 was appropriated

CHAIRMAN KERR, of the State Committee, in an interview at New York, says of the contest in this State: "The Democrats have more hope of carrying the State than they had last year. The Democrats are a unit, and with them are a great many good citizens who have heretofore voted the Republican ticket. The issue is plainly before the people. Other questions are lost sight of. The recent manifesto signed by many prominent Republicans is just one straw. When the candidates are named the fight will be prosecuted as hotly as we know how along these lines" He likewise predicts that Democratic success this Fall will insert a new and powerful element into the Presidential calculations next year, at the same time he says: "The Democrats of Pennsylvania are for Cleveland."

BARDSLEY'S statement, in which he makes the good John Wanamaker squirm by stating that he was interested in the collapse of the Keystone National Bank and that he knowingly borrowed State funds, makes lively reading. It shows a condition of rottenness in Philadelphia not equalled in New York city in the halcyon days of the Tweed ring There will be hot denials, of course, but through all this mist of ambiguity and reckless insinuation there gleams the truth It cannot longer be downed Wanamaker, who has thus been publicly smirched, is evidently one of the colossal hypocrites of the age, or else a political saint who can be relied upon to save the Republican party from defeat by raising blocks of $400,000 Bardsley, however, has ceased contributing to the Republican corruption fund

THE recent Delamater "sale" at Meadville is described in part by the Meadville Messenger It says that many would be bidders came to the mansion expecting a chance to buy something, but they found bare rooms and an almost empty house Little remained of value—scarcely enough to furnish two rooms, and the whole sale at the house only amounted to about $250, and about the same amount at the barn. The horses had been sold previously Indignant depositors declared that the house was gutted like the bank, and that the way things are panning out the property of the bankrupts will not more than pay the preferred judgments of $115,000 held by the members of the family and their relatives, leaving nothing to apply on their debts of about $1,000 000 The assignee says that what was taken from the house previously was under the $300 allowance, of which Mr Delamater had availed himself, and also articles claimed as personal property by others.

OVER-OFFICIOUS OFFICIALS.

Last January when the County Commissioners took possession of their office they were swelled all out of proportion by their ideas of their importance, collectively and individually. They seemed from the first to lose sight of the fact that they had been elected, not to make laws, but to carry out the existing statutes as far as Tioga county was concerned In their own minds they at once "became greater than the powers that be,' and consequently the laughing-stock of the legal fraternity and all who are at all conversant with the laws of the Commonwealth. The amendments to the State laws, or special acts for Tioga county, passed by the present Board of Commissioners, haven t all been printed, and, if in press, it will be a long time before they will be issued, owing to the voluminous character of the work. A great deal of territory has been covered—indeed it may be said without much exaggeration that they have passed more bills than did the last Legislature, though many of them are so sickly that they will never gain strength enough to need a veto

After meditating for some time the Commissioners arrived at the conclusion that they would not issue a duplicate to any Collector holding an unsettled duplicate on June 1, 1891 Possibly they could have enforced this, had they possessed the power given Boards of County Commissioners by an Act approved February 27, 1835, whereby the Commissioners selected and appointed the Collectors But as the Act in question had been repealed some years ago by the approval of an Act making the office of collector an elective one, this fiat of the would-be law-making Board of Commissioners fell very flat, and caused the collectors who had been extending the time of hard pressed tax-payers, to smile at the child-like simplicity of the unsophisticated members of the Board A writer in the Agitator, over the signature of "Collector," called the Board to order in a facetious manner, causing great indignation in the camp of the law-making Commissioners. They immediately rushed into print in defense of their position and quoted the obsolete and repealed Act of February 27, 1835, to the great amusement of the members of the bar and all well informed collectors of the county

After a good deal of wonderment as to why the delinquent collectors had not been terrorized by their decree, the Commissioners, evidently with the assistance of an outside party, ascertained that they were in error and had no power to withhold tax duplicates from men elected as collectors by the people This was a bitter disappointment to the amateur lawmakers, but they were forced to either quietly swallow their chagrin or have it publicly rammed down their official throats. They chose the former method, and the collectors gave evidence of their satisfaction by a broad grin whenever the subject was broached. Then for the time being they abandoned law-making. Becoming convalescent some time last month they hatched out and issued the following remarkable piece of deplorable ignorance, which bears the date of June 20, 1891, and is signed by all three Commissioners

To the Justices of the Peace and Constables of Tioga County

The county is not liable for any costs that arise in prosecutions which are discharged by the magistrate By virtue of the Act of May 19, 1887, the costs of the officers, including the costs of the justice and constable, shall be chargeable to and paid by the proper county as soon as the case is disposed of by the court. We know of no law that makes the county liable for costs in cases that never reach the court of Quarter Sessions. And no such bills will be paid by the county after this day.

Had the learned gentlemen consulted the records they would have quickly ascertained that their peculiar position was not tenable, according to decisions of the State Supreme Court; but even had this been done it is extremely doubtful if they would have agreed with the ruling of the court in question, so exalted is the estimation in which they hold their own power and worth.

Amerman's State Reports, Vol CXIII, January term, 1886, page 378, gives the report of a case entitled "The County of Lehigh vs. Emerson F Shoch"

"The plaintiff was an Alderman of the city of Allentown, Lehigh county. Information for the following criminal charges were laid before him: Cruelty to animals, assault and battery, malicious trespass, false pretence, larceny, peddling without license, surety of the peace and common scold. A day of hearing was fixed when witnesses were heard on the Commonwealth's part, and [illegible] upon the plaintiff claimed his fees from the county and brought suit under the Act of September 28, 1791, Pardon's Digest, 391."

A verdict of $37.20 was returned for the plaintiff by the Lehigh Court. The case was then carried to the Supreme Court, where the verdict of the lower court was affirmed. The following is a portion of the opinion of the Court, as delivered by Justice Trunkey, October 4, 1886:

" " " The eleventh section of the Act of 1791 provides that costs on bills returned ignoramus by the grand jury should be paid out of the county stock, and not by the party charged with any felony, breach of the peace or other indictable offence. Section 13 of that Act, still in force, provides "that when any person shall be brought before a court, justice of the peace, or other magistrate, on the charge of having committed a crime, if such charge shall appear unfounded, the cost shall be paid out of the county stock, and not by such innocent person" The word "crime" is used in its general sense and means all indictable offences, just as it is used and means in section 64 in the Criminal Procedure Act of 1860 The context in the Act of 1791, as well as in the Act of 1860, shows that the word "crime" includes indictable misdemeanors Properly speaking, crimes and misdemeanors are synonymous terms, in common usage the word "crimes" is made to denote such offences as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye, while the smaller faults are comprised under the gentler name of "misdemeanors"

Possibly the Commissioners may have dug up a law unknown to the learned Justice quoted and the other members of the Supreme Bench, but it will be a difficult matter to make the intelligent people of Tioga county believe it. The Commissioners are right in saying, "We know of no law that makes the county liable for costs in cases that never reach the court of Quarter Sessions," as there are many laws the existence of which they are ignorant. The act of 1887, referred to by the Commissioners, has no reference whatever to justices' courts, its purpose being simply to facilitate business in the county courts of the State If the Commissioners keep on in this way it will be some time before they will be able to pass an examination and be admitted as members of the bar

PACKER NOT A CANDIDATE.

Will Take the Republican Chairmanship if it Comes Without a Contest.

Senator Packer, who is being talked of as a compromise candidate for Chairman of the State Republican Committee, was in Harrisburg last week Wednesday To a Patriot representative the Senator said "My newspaper friends have been very kind in suggesting me as a successor to Chairman Andrews, but I am not a candidate and never have been I don't think there will be a contest made for the place The convention will agree upon one of our ablest men for the honor and he will be selected. If the chairmanship would come to me in this way I probably would not decline to serve, but under no conditions would I make a fight for it.

"I saw Captain Morrison in Philadelphia," continued Senator Packer "He told me his chances of securing the nomination for State Treasurer were very promising I believe he has the lead at this time, but there is no telling what the result will be. Speaker Thompson is a candidate, I understand. He will probably get a great many delegates For Auditor General Senator Mylin leads all his competitors Giles D. Price, of Erie, and his friends are sending out letters to Republicans all over the State asking them to support Mr Price He is very strong among the Grangers."

WANAMAKER'S TROUBLE THICKENS

Pronounced the Republican Jonah—A Democratic Plan Endorsed

WASHINGTON, July 14—A great big scandal, involving, through more than one of its members, the Administration, may be the outcome of the Itata business, It is whispered in inside circles here that the opinions of certain people—the matter is entirely too serious to use names upon no better basis than rumor—have been influenced both for and against the Chilian insurgents by the receipt of large sums of money, which has, according to the story, been furnished by certain parties in New York who are heavily interested in Chilian commerce, and whose business rivalry is thought by many to be at the bottom of all the trouble in that unfortunate country. Certain it is that Balmaceda and the insurgents are both represented in Washington by shrewd agents and lawyers, the latter Americans, and the appearances indicate that both sides are well supplied with money and that at least one side has paid big money for the right to use the news columns of certain newspapers The Administration officially recognizes only the Balmaceda Government, but Senor Monti, the representative here of the Chilian insurgents, or as he says, "the only Constitutional Government of Chili," appears confident that the Itata will be released by the courts and that the insurgents will soon be recognized by this Government.

It is rather an odd coincidence that Secretary Foster, the defender of the extravagance of the Billion Dollar Congress, and a man who has been prominent in his party as a sportsman, should have reached the same conclusion that the late Hon. Samuel J. Randall, who as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives made a reputation for honesty and economy in public expenditures never surpassed, did as to the advisability of abolishing five out of the six Auditor's offices of the Treasury Department, because of the uselessness of the work done in the offices, which consist almost entirely of duplicating the work done in the offices of the Comptrollers of the Treasury Mr. Randall once drew up a bill to abolish these and some other useless bureaus of the Treasury Department, but he found it impossible to secure support for it in Congress, because it meant a large reduction in the number of clerks employed, which meant that much less patronage for the Congressmen. It would be an easy matter, were Congress so disposed, to save nearly $2,000,000 per year in this one department, by taking up and carrying out Mr. Randall's original idea, which for some reason Mr. Foster has seen fit to endorse.

Fourth Auditor Lynch, the negro who with ex-Senator Bruce was given office in exchange for a Harrison delegation from Mississippi, has just returned from that State and reports that the contract has been complied with, and that not only Mississippi but the entire South will send a solid Harrison delegation to the Republican convention, which cannot be broken. He forgot to add Unless some other candidate is disposed to open a barrel, in which case the Southern delegation can be stampeded just as they have been in all previous Republican National Conventions.

There has been a hitch in making public the schedule for the subsidized lines of steamships, which was promised for last week by Mr. Wanamaker. It is still in the hands of Mr. Harrison, who took it for revision before leaving Washington, and those who ought to know say that the trouble has been taken up by the Harrisons, to point out to the Postmaster General that [illegible] been with the wrecked Keystone Bank of Philadelphia, and they say that Mr. Harrison has subjected Mr. Wanamaker to a much more rigid examination than the committee in Philadelphia did. The Republican chief in public that Mr. Wanamaker's several explanations have completely exonerated him; but among themselves they are not quite so sure about it, and many of them predict that it is going to give the party lots of trouble, particularly in Pennsylvania. It is certainly an affair to be deeply regretted, not only by Mr. Wanamaker's personal and political friends, but by the public at large.

Another negro—Fred Douglass—will soon be out of a job, as it is semi officially announced that he will not go back to Hayti, as minister He brought with him a reciprocity treaty with Hayti which he negotiated, but the Administration for some reason doesn't seem proud of it D

By rolling and rubbing the child was resuscitated The father of the little girl says he would not sell the fawn for $1,000

AMELIE RIVES SILENCE —The literary event of the Summer in the United States will be the publication in the Cosmopolitan magazine of a short novel by Amelie Rives which she calls "According to St John It is said to be the strongest work from the pen that produced "A Brother to Dragons' and 'The Quick or the Dead Its publication in the Cosmopolitan is a guarantee that it will contain nothing of the kind that excited criticism in Miss Rives' earlier productions

THE purchasing power of twenty cents may seem small yet it secures economy for the poor good health in consequence of warm dry feet to the feeble pleasure to the rich and fastidious and comfort to everybody when invested in a bottle of Wolff's Acme Blacking You can get blacking for 5c and 10c which would be dear if Acme Blacking were worth a dollar, and you can get the just as good for 25c and over, which is no better than the 5c and 10c, but put up in shower packages

ELMIRA'S Great Inter-State Fair this Fall will undoubtedly eclipse anything of its kind ever before seen in the United States For nearly a whole year the managers have been engaged in perfecting the list of attractions and arranging matters for conducting the exhibition Special days for different organizations such as the Red Men, Ancient Order of United Workmen and others, will be a novelty never before introduced and will serve to bring together the different branches of these great organizations which otherwise would probably never have come together While all these great attractions will of course, be attractions in themselves, the managers will, nevertheless, treat them as guests and special attractions will be provided for them, so that each day double attractions will be offered for the other visitors

WELLSBORO AS A GLASS CENTRE.

What General Supt. Zellers Says of the Future of This Factory.

Mr. Theodore A. Zellers, of Ottawa, Ill., General Superintendent of the United Glass Company, is in Wellsboro looking over the improvements being made on the Wellsboro factory. Mr. Zellers informed a GAZETTE reporter that it was the intention to make this factory one of the largest and best equipped in the syndicate. Coal and sand were cheap, and he believed that a first-class quality of glass could be made here as cheaply, if not cheaper, than at many other points. Should this be the case the capacity of the factory would again be doubled, as it was the intention of the Company to reduce the number of small factories and increase the number of large ones A large factory could be handled as cheaply as a small one, as the latter required the services of both a superintendent and a book-keeper, the same as a factory doing from four to eight times the amount of business

Mr Zellers said that in all probability the Blossburg factory would be put in operation this Fall The Covington factory would not be started, and from the gentleman's manner of expressing himself, it was taken for granted that he entertained no hope of work ever being resumed at Covington

When asked concerning the rumor that Superintendent Grant was to be placed in charge of the Ithaca (N Y) factory and his place here filled by Mr Charles Ely, of Blossburg, Mr Zeller said he could give no definite information There had been some such talk, but he was not prepared to say how it would materialize Superintendent Grant he said was an excedingly capable man, well qualified for the position, and he disliked to have him removed from a new and first-class factory to one sadly out of repair. The matter, however, would be settled by Vice President Gray, of Syracuse, N Y., who is expected to be here some time next week

The work on the repairs and additions to the factory are being pushed In several of the small furnaces drying fires have been kindled, giving the scene an additional look of activity Mr Zellers said the factory would be in readiness for the resumption of work by the first of September

A Slippery Woodsman Captured.

Last November George Mattison, James Mattison, Woody Mattison and Warney Mattison, of Gaines, were indicted for making a murderous assault upon Constable Martin at that place They were all arraigned for trial at the same term of court, but gave bail for their appearance at the January term and the case was continued. When the case was called at the January term Warney Mattison failed to appear and it was said that he had left the State The officers have since then been on the watch for the slippery woodsman, who it was said had located in the West At all events his place of hiding could not be discovered, and Constable Martin began to think the fellow would never be brought to justice Young Mattison, however, could not keep away from Tioga county, and on the Fourth he was seen in Gaines Constable Martin at once came to Wellsboro, secured the necessary papers for the arrest of Mattison and placed them in the hands of Deputy Sheriff Ed Sheffer Last week Wednesday the latter officer came upon his man at work in the bark woods near Gaines Cautiously working his way through the underbrush for a distance of about twenty rods, he suddenly pounced upon Mattison who had not observed his approach The fellow was taken completely by surprise and made no resistance Deputy Sheffer arrived in Wellsboro late the same evening with his prisoner

Middlebury's New Baptist Church

A very neat and substantial little church has been built by the Baptists of Middlebury. It has a seating capacity of 200 and was constructed by Harman Borden & Co of this place at a cost of about $2 000 The building formerly occupied by the First Baptists was also used by the Free Will Baptists of the neighborhood The two societies failed to get along well together, and plans were formed about a year ago for building a new church Then through the efforts A B A. Briggs, W A. Mitchell, N. W. Lewis and others, a site was purchased at Holidaystown and the contract let as mentioned to Harman, Borden & Co.

The church was dedicated on Wednesday of last week, the music for the occasion being furnished by the Middlebury Cornet Band The corner stone was laid by Rev Fisher Wilson, of Tioga, the prayer being made by Rev Mr Field of Knoxville The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Rev Mr Thomas of Philadelphia, Rev G P Watrous offering prayer Three hundred and seventy-one dollars of the church indebtedness was raised, which leaves only about $300 unprovided for Rev Fisher Wilson made the Church a present of a fine clock The church was handsomely decorated and presented an attractive appearance

A Crooked Hay Buyer.

Mr. Floyd Mattason, of Mansfield, spent several weeks in this place during May and June and purchased several car loads of hay It now appears that Mattason has left the State and has also left many of the farmers in the lurch A Mansfield correspondent writes to the Elmira Advertiser as follows 'It is now an assured fact that Floyd Mattason, the extensive hay buyer and shipper, has 'skipped' over the State line and left a large number of Tioga county citizens to mourn his departure, and also the loss of large sums of hard earned money. J. B. Clark, of this place, one of his heaviest creditors, is out about $600, with which Mattason has been buying hay Mr Clark informs us that Mattason has got into people in this part of the county to the probable extent of about $2,000, and nearly as much in the vicinity of Wellsboro A load of his household goods were moved from here on Monday night, and on Tuesday Mr. Clark got out an attachment and held what was left behind, which he (Mattason) was intending to have moved on Wednesday night. Mattason is now, it is supposed, in Elmira."

Bears in Farmington.

A large black bear has been seen several times recently in the woods near the farms of Messrs. Harry Kemp and George Rhodes, in Farmington A hunting party was organized a few days ago and the hunters found where bruin had made his quarters, but failed to get sight of his bearship The tracks left by the bear in the soft ground were very large, and appearances would indicate that he had been there for some time Several of the Farmington farmers have been missing lambs from their flocks recently, and it is now supposed that the bear carried them off and devoured them A bear was killed a few days ago near Little Marsh, only a few miles from where the one was seen in Farmington. It is supposed that the animals were driven out of their usual haunts by the forest fires.

THE BLUE RUN TRAGEDY.

Did Mrs. Hancock Help Kill Her Husband and Four Children?

Readers of the GAZETTE'S will remember the Blue Run tragedy of April, 1889, an extended account of which appeared in these columns at the time. It will also be remembered that soon after the butchery of the four little children and the suicide of the father, Frank Hancock, by hanging, that a couple of blood-stained aprons belonging to Mrs. Hancock were claimed to have been found under a small building near the one in which the children had been killed The GAZETTE at that time also gave an account of the strange actions of one J H Coagley, a quondam lover of Mrs. Hancock The day previous to the tragedy was passed by the two in the woods near Blue Run After the funeral of the five victims Coagley's actions excited suspicion in the minds of many people living in that portion of the county He first went to Austin Potter county, where he secured work in the big hemlock mill He remained at Austin but a short time and returned to this county, seeming to entertain the belief that he was being trailed by a detective Coagley secured employment in Russell's sawmill, near this place, and had been at work only a few days when he was greatly frightened by the arrival of a Wellsboro young man at the mill boarding house He told some fellow workmen that he was being followed by an officer for the part he had taken in the Blue Run affair They only laughed at his fears, but this did not allay the fellow's suspicions, and a few days later he suddenly departed for parts unknown His strange actions and remarks at that time are said to have caused people to entertain the opinion that he knew more than he wished to tell in regard to the shocking tragedy

The scenes and incidents of the Blue Run affair and Coagley's strange actions are again brought before the public by the following startling rumor which is given for what it is worth, as there has been no time to attempt a verification of the story. After the murder of her four children and the alleged suicide of her husband the Hancock woman began living an open life of shame frequenting the bark and lumber camps of Potter county and becoming the willing companion of the rough lumbermen in that section It is evident that she attempted to drown remorse by diving deeper into the pool of dissipation But the "pace was one that kills, and the woman became the victim of her own misdeeds Her death is said to have occurred in one of these lumber camps last week Before dying she made a confession in which she is alleged to have stated that Frank Hancock did not murder his four children and did not commit suicide

On the night of the butchery Mrs Hancock and two of her lovers entered the house prepared to put an end to the existence of her husband One of these men carried a bottle of chloroform, while the other was armed with an ugly look ing knife It was not intended to use the latter unless an unexpected emergency should arise The unexpected happened, followed by the awful consequences Hancock was chloroformed and the three were preparing to hang him to one of the rafters of the dwelling to give the appearance of a suicide, when Gracie, aged 10 years, awoke The child gazed around the room in wonderment What were those men trying to do with her papa? She had barely time to ask a question when the three brutes actuated by a desire to gratify unholy passions, determined that she too must die Snatching the knife from the hands of the man who was carrying it the inhuman mother drove it deep into the vitals of the child The crimson flood which followed the withdrawal of the knife spattered the hemlock walls of the little chamber and stained the bed clothing and the hands and garments of the murderess

Hancock was then hung to the rafters and left to slowly strangle to death, about the effects of the chloroform have passed away before the rope had performed its work Just as the three had completed their hellish task another of the children turned uneasily in its bed and sighed child like, as if over weary from the effects of its play during the day Then the passion crazed mother and the two fiends resolved that the little ones should be forever stilled, and the blood of the innocent little ones was spattered about the room as the cruel knife was driven again and again into the quivering little bodies. Only one child was spared—the youngest. The murderers of the father and four children then covered their tracks by Mrs Hancock writing a note to the parents of her murdered husband and one to herself and signing Hancock's name to both (The evidence adduced at the inquest tended to show that there was a similarity in the handwriting of Hancock and wife) The guilty trio then left the building and Mrs Hancock went to the home of a neighbor and passed the night. The following morning, April 20, 1889, she went to the house and made the so-called discovery that her husband had killed four of the five children and committed suicide by hanging

It is stated that one of the parties mentioned by Mrs Hancock in her confession, has been arrested and lodged in the Coudersport jail

John King's Miraculous Escape from a Frightful Death—Other News.

TIADAGHTON, July 13.—The new locomotive for the Mountain railroad arrived this morning It is standard gauge and weighs thirty-one tons. It is the same style engine as those used on the narrow gauge at Slate Run.

H Austin has his boarding house nearly completed.

H. C Clark is pushing the work on the bridge for C B Farr & Co He has one span nearly finished. It takes three spans each eighty feet in length to reach across the creek.

Roy Benn, Farr's teamster, is laid up with a bruised knee.

While blasting rocks near the top of the mountain on Thursday, John King, of Tioga, who has charge of a gang of Italians, came near losing his life. A blast had been put down about eight feet. They waited twenty minutes for it to explode, and King thinking it a failure started down the mountain to see what was the matter Just as he reached the spot the blast exploded. Over twenty tons of rock was thrown down the mountain, King's life was saved by a seam in the rocks. As it was he was completely prostrated by the shock and fright. R.

The Old Wooden Swing.

Between two ancient oaks it swings,
To and fro, to and fro,
And with each creak,
It seems to speak
Of long ago, long ago.
Its broad arms were always open,
Long ago, long ago,
And it seldom idle hung,
But by busy hand was swung,
To and fro, to and fro.
Now the grass grows green and tall;
Long ago, long ago;
It was worn beneath the seat
By the tramp of little feet,
To and fro, to and fro.
Here youth and maiden, dreaming, swayed
To and fro, to and fro;
Here was told the story olden
In those days so fair and golden,
Long ago, long ago.
Ah! those happy boys and girls!
Long ago, long ago,
Far from home
Their footsteps roam
To and fro, to and fro.
And the old swing idly swaying
To and fro, to and fro,
Seems to sigh
As we go by
Of long ago, long ago.

CHANGING HER NAME.

"Oh, I've no objection to changing my name," said Phebe Warland. She spoke in a tone no louder than her usual wont, but it so happened that the piano, violin and cornet, engaged by Mrs. Dupre for her little informal dance had just finished the waltz numbers with a final crash, and during the unnatural silence that followed Phebe's voice sounded clear and distinct.

Everybody looked in her direction; she looked confused and turned red.

"Most young ladies haven't," said Capt. Casserly, mischievously.

"It depends entirely on who asks you, eh, Phebe?" laughed Mildred Payne, not without a spice of malice in her voice.

Ulric Perry looked at her with a cold, disapproving glance.

Of all things he valued delicacy and refinement in a woman, and up to this time he had firmly believed Phebe Warland to be a pure, sweet lily of the valley among women. And now this bold and startling declaration savored of the fast-young-lady type which he particularly disliked.

As for Phebe herself, she sat silent, the rosy blushes suffusing her fair forehead to the very roots of her hair.

"I'm of the same opinion myself, Phebe," called out Fairy Falkland, who was the most uncompromising romp in the town. "Only I haven't had the courage to declare it before folks."

"Here's the lanciers," said Casserly. "Miss Falkland, will you honor me?—always with the understanding that I'm not prepared to ask you to change your name."

There was a general laugh, and when Ulric Perry looked around for Miss Warland her place was vacant.

"It is very strange," said he. "I had written my name down on her card for the lanciers. Now I cannot find her."

"It's always the way with those prim prudes," said his sister, Mrs. Lovejoy, with a toss of her head. "There's more than one side to them. I dare say she's flirting with that young Cuban officer out in the hall."

Ulric Perry was very silent when she came home from the Dupre party.

Cilla, her sister, was in unusual spirits.

"I say, Phebe," she cried, as she brushed out her masses of auburn curls, "what a sensation you made!"

Phebe made no answer.

"But it was a ridiculous speech, wasn't it?"

Phebe bit her lip.

"You might at least have spoken up to defend me, Cilla."

Cilla shrugged her shoulders.

"What could I say? That you were steadfastly determined to make a fool of yourself? Thank you. I don't mean to be the first to declare that fact to the public."

"Oh, Cilla! After the dreadful language that butcher used to mamma yesterday."

"Tradespeople always make themselves disagreeable."

"And that poor dressmaker crying so over her summer's elegant bill!"

"All put on," complacently murmured Cilla, the brush still passing in and out among the gleaming masses of her rich hair. "But there's one thing—what you say or don't say won't make much difference to Ulric Perry after this."

"No, I know that it won't," Phebe listlessly answered.

"You saw that glance of his, then?"

"Yes, I saw it."

And Phebe went to bed and cried herself miserably to sleep.

"It is very strange," said Mrs. Lovejoy to her brother, Ulric Perry, several weeks afterward. "But one never sees that youngest Miss Warland in society any more."

"Perhaps she is out of town."

"No, for I met her lately."

Mrs. Lovejoy looked keenly at her brother. Ulric's face was as impassive as that of the Egyptian sphinx.

Just about that time the lace window draperies in the Perry mansion needed renewing, and when Mrs. Lovejoy heard that her brother was going to Philadelphia she declared her intention of accompanying him.

"And you will go with me to Beauclerc's," said she, cunningly, "and give me the valley cashmere shawl you've promised me so long. Do, Ulric, there's a darling."

What could Ulric do but yield?

The shawl department at Beauclerc's was crowded, and the smiling shopwalker called one of the attendants from an adjoining room to act as lay-figure for the advantageous display of the $1,000 shawl on which Mrs. Lovejoy had fixed her fancy.

"Miss Denton," he called, "be so good as to step this way. There!"—flinging the shawl in sumptuous folds over her shoulders—"you can scarcely fail to see the effect now."

Mrs. Lovejoy gave a little start.

"Ulric," she softly whispered, "it is Phebe Warland."

But he had turned away, and was apparently occupied in scrutinizing a rare old piece of German tapestry displayed in the window.

Mrs. Lovejoy put up her eye-glasses and feigned to examine the Indian shawl.

Phebe turned white and red by turns.

"How do you do, Mrs. Lovejoy," said she, breaking the embarrassing silence at last.

"I thought that it was you," stammered the customer. "But why did they call you Miss Denton?"

"Actresses always assume stage names," said Phebe, coldly smiling. "It is their privilege. I am an actress on life's stage. Denton is my middle name, and I have a right to it."

"Yes; but—but—"

"I understand. It seems strange to you. You cannot comprehend my motive. Well, I do not blame you. We are poor. The Warland name and pedigree are not of any use to live upon, so I have decided to break loose from old traditions and earn my own living, besides paying a few troublesome indebtedness. My mother and sister did not approve of my plan, therefore to satisfy their scruples I changed my name."

"Changed your name?" Ulric Perry had come forward now and was standing with his dark, intent eyes fixed on the girl's countenance. "Was that what you meant, Miss Warland, that evening——"

"At Mrs. Dupre's? Yes, I was discussing the project with my sister then. She had made it a stipulation that I should entirely detach myself from the family gentility"—with a bitter smile—"and I have done so. Not Phebe Warland at all, but Denton. I am—"

"Ashamed!" repeated Ulric. "If ever woman was a heroine you are one, Miss Warland, and I have no words to say how highly I honor you or—or how deeply I despise myself for misunderstanding you."

Did ever a man propose and become accepted in the shawl department of a monster store at high noon before? Probably not.

Ulric used no special form of words. It is possible that his eyes spoke more than his lips while Mrs. Lovejoy was busy directing the packing of her treasure. All that he was certain of was that he did propose and was accepted.

And for the second time Phebe Warland openly acknowledged that she had no objection to changing her name.—Family Story Paper.

CONCEALING DEFICIENCIES.

Why One Negro Could Not Write and Another Could Not Count.

Two stories characteristic of the negro were told in the smoke room of a transatlantic steamer recently.

Said a gentleman from New Orleans: "I stood on the levee in our city one morning while the paymaster of a river steamer was engaged in paying off the roustabouts.

"As each man presented himself at the cashier's window the paymaster asked the question whether he would sign his name or make his mark. If he was unable to write the paymaster, of course, subscribed the name and left a place for the man to place a cross.

"You must recollect that since the close of the war and the establishment of schools for freedmen the negroes of the South are very unwilling to admit ignorance upon their part.

"The payment of the men proceeded without incident until one young up country darky presented himself at the window in response to the calling of the name of Eugene Jackson.

"'Will you write your name or make a cross, Jackson?' asked the paymaster.

"'I'll write my name,' replied the negro.

"The pen was handed to him and the place for his signature was carefully pointed out on the payroll.

"The man took the pen clumsily, dipped it in the ink, looked at it and then at the payroll and finally laid it down on the desk.

"'What time is it?' he asked, looking up at the paymaster.

"'It is just ten o'clock,' was the reply.

"'Well, then,' said the darky. 'I guess I ain't got time to write my name. I've got to meet a man at the Custom House at twelve o'clock and I guess I'll just make a cross.'

"The Custom House," said the New Orleans man, in conclusion, "is about ten minutes' walk from where the man was standing."

"That reminds me of a little experience I once had with a negro," said a brick manufacturer of a little town up the Hudson, who chanced to be of the party.

"We called the man 'old Uncle Ned,'" continued the speaker. "He was a dear, old, white headed fellow, with a bent back and about seventy years old at the time the incident I am about to relate occurred.

"He had lived in a little shanty in the town for years and did odd jobs at whitewashing, masonry work and various other things.

"One day I wanted a man to stack brick for me in piles of a thousand each, and to turn a little something in the way of Uncle Ned I hired him for the job.

"'Can you count, Ned?' I asked him after I had told him what I wanted.

"'Yes, indeed, I kin massa,' the old fellow replied with a chuckle. 'I kin count right smart, and he ran off the numerals up to ten glibly enough.

"Ned began his task and worked steadily for some hours. I looked out of my office window after awhile and saw that he had far exceeded his number of a thousand bricks to a stack.

"I walked out to see about it. He was hard of hearing and did not detect my approach as I came up behind him. I drew nearer and overhead him say, as he lay each brick on the stack: 'A nudder an' a nudder, and der goes a nudder. A nudder an' a nudder, and der goes a nudder.'

"What in the world are you doing, Ned?' I asked.

"'Countin' de bricks, massa,' he replied, as he continued: 'A nudder an' a nudder, an' der goes a nudder.'

"But, Ned, you can't count bricks that way; that is not counting. I thought you could count one, two, three, four, &c.'

"'Yes, I dun tole you I could count, an' so I did up to ten, but Ned's pretty ole now, massa, an' after ten he dun forget his schoolin', an' so he counts a nudder, an a nudder, an der goes a nudder.'

"There was something pathetic about the poor old fellow's speech," continued the speaker. "Of course I paid him for his day's work," he added; "but I had to have his stack of bricks recounted, and had to give the balance of the job to a couple of twelve-year-old boys, who were more expert at figures than he."—*N. QUAINT GEN. PIKE.

An Original Character as Well as a Man of Extraordinary Tradition.

Gen. Albert Pike was not only the foremost Mason in the world of the Scottish Rite, but was one of the most quaint figures of the National capital. As Grand Commander of the Masons he had more power than any man alive. He could make Masons "at sight" up to and including the Thirty-second Degree and invest them with that degree without their having to pass through the work of their local bodies. His prerogative was only limited to creating Masons of the Thirty-third Degree, which is the highest of all degrees, and even in this the nomination of Gen. Pike was equivalent to election as hierophant and monarch.

For years Gen. Pike has been one of the most picturesque characters about Washington's streets. He was of gigantic frame, with a large head, from which long white locks fell far below his shoulders. He wore a shirt of unbleached cotton, a pair of Confederate gray pantaloons and Indian mocasins. But eccentric as he was in dress he abhorred eccentricities in Masonry and was rapidly doing away with them. He had abolished many of the bombastic titles of the Order. His title had formerly been "Most Puissant Grand Commander," but he simplified it to Grand Commander. He struck off the words, "Grand and Supreme" which had formerly preceded the names of Secretary-General, Minister of State and Prince of the Royal Secret. He insisted that the use of these high-sounding phrases tended to make the Order an object of ridicule to the outside world.

He leaves behind him some literary works which are little short of marvellous. On the shelves of the Supreme Council here are about twenty bound quarto volumes containing his translations from Aryan literature. They are not printed but are in manuscript, every word being written by Gen. Pike, and in all of the thousands of pages there is not a scratched word or an erasure. If Gen. Pike had given the same time and erudition to the world of literature instead of to the secret Order of which he was the head his name would undoubtedly have been classed with the Ruskins, Emersons and Carlyles.—Washington Letter.

A Genuine Big Bug.

The biggest insect of its kind in the world is the Hercules beetle of South America, which grows to be six inches in length. It is said, whether truthfully or not, that great numbers of these creatures are sometimes seen on the mammoth tree, ranging the vast from the slender branches by working around them with their horns until they cause the juice to flow. This juice they drink to intoxication, and then fall senseless to the ground.

FAIR WOMAN'S WORLD.

FASHIONS AND FANCIES THAT PLEASE THE GENTLER SEX.

Some of the Ruling Styles for the Summer—Seasonable—The Corselet Bodice—Dresses for Women Who Go Fishing—Some Skirt Blouses.

THE CORSELET BODICE THAT IS seen this season among so many of the new gowns for the house is also seen among trim tailor-made costumes for the seaside and the country. Many of the corselets fasten on the left side and are worn above gulmpes, full at the top when becoming or laid flat and prettily trimmed. It fits the figure much as a corset does, and is shaply pointed or bluntly rounded. At the top it arches to a point, front and back, and curves deeply below the arms. The back part has generally the same number of seams as a waist proper, but the front are drawn smoothly over the lining and shaped by a single seam down the middle. Bodices in this style are made of almost every sort of summer fabric, and they are equally effective in pink silk or pink chambray, in satin brocade or zephyr gingham, in velvet, veiling or fallie.

A large number of women will be interested in the light surah sunshades in silver gray and fawn, which match the silk dust-cloaks and make simple but pretty outfits for country driving or walking. Fishing dresses begin to be exhibited, but it seldom happens that the woman who knows enough about fishing to catch anything wears one of them. Nevertheless, a pale brown homespun would be, on a river-bank, even if its wearer read a novel instead of baiting her hook, very effective. Faint lines of pale blue and white check the material, and the dress is made with a plain short skirt, box-plaited behind, with buttons down the middle of the waistcoat, and with a smart jacket turned back with revers.

In addition to the many bright colored gowns there is a tendency towards the always stylish and becoming black toilettes relieved by a little dash of color here and there. Grenadine has usurped the place of the serviceable black lace costume and these come in dotted serpentine stripes and brocaded ribbon effects. They must be made up over colored silk of changable tints. Jet, gold galloon and jeweled passementerie and lace form the decorations which are confined exclusively to the bodices. The most popular mode in these dresses is the round bodice gathered over a tight lining, high puffed sleeves and having flounces of lace about the straight long skirt. A vest of white guipure, laid over gold colored silk and dotted with jet cabochons or a waistcoat of gold brocade makes a striking finish for some of the more ambitious confections in the procession. With those dainty costumes may be carried a black crepe de chine handkerchief, finished with a frill of French lace and having French lace butterflies appliqued in each corner.

There's a good deal of color in the new shirt blouses, and black and yellow stripes seem to be a favorite combination. Both blonde and brunette fancy they look well in such a mingling of darkness and brightness, though if an impartial verdict were rendered scarlet and cream, dark blue and cream, pale blue and écru and black and cream are more generally becoming. White lawn blouses, delicately embroidered, are worn either inside or outside the skirt, and are varied by pink, cardinal, gray and sky-blue cambric blouses, which would gratify both the æsthetic sense and the sense of comfort more completely if they weren't afflicted with collars of such elevation. Roll collars, however, with searching, may be found. For garden parties and for Summer fetes of all descriptions the lace frocks that do so abound are covered with ribbons. One of the most striking of those furnished this week is hung with fine black. Chantilly over black silk, the skirt laid off in great sharp-pointed diamonds by a little work of narrow black velvet ribbons edged with stripes of white satin. A deep lace flounce finishes the bodice, which is cut with a low pointed corsage with interlacing ribbons. Long ribbon knot in a rosette bow between the shoulders at the back and long in streamers.

The summer girl's best friend is her veil. To be sure, there is something charmingly rough and ready about a tousle of curly hair, a couple of red cheeks, and a jaunty sailor hat; and we seldom hardly to match these, but oh, let the summer girl be wise. There are few whose tons of curly hair does not owe its kink to the tongs, and the first few breezes turn the curly crop into nothing but tuss, and that chiefly scraggle. Few "roses" can stand a day's outing without spreading toward the nose and growing a little sporty. A veil of rather rough net, with dots besprinkled generously, will keep the hair and hat in place, protect the peachy skin, or at least conceal the effect of wind and shine. By all means then, the veil. It may come off for luncheon of course, and a hasty and, perhaps surreptitious dab of powder, smoothed over by a subsequent rub of palm or handkerchief, makes one seem fresh, "blooming," and quite in trim to admire a veilless friend, who is all bedraggled and shiny, and to say how we wish we could do it. A fan and a parasol may serve, like a veil, to protect the complexion, as our first girl is doing.

A Glove Tree.

A glove tree is a new fancy. This is a plaster cast of the hand of the owner on which she stretches her gloves when not in use, so that they are moulded to the hand when worn and do not get out of shape lying in the glove box or drawer. Very few people take proper care of a kid glove after removing it from the hand. Nothing is more slovenly than to roll it up in a hard little knot in the way it is sometimes disposed of when not in use. Remove it from the hand carefully; do not strip it off, turning it inside out and straining all the seams, but take it off gently, pulling each of the fingers into shape. Lay it long twise stretched out in a glove box of sufficient length so that it need not be folded over at the wrist. A glove that is properly cared for will last longer and fit far better all the time it lasts than one that is carelessly treated. A silk glove should fit the hand as snugly as one of kid, and should be taken care of as thoroughly. As silk is very elastic it is necessary to purchase a silk glove a size or two smaller than the size of the kid glove worn, in order to have it fit the hand properly. The very best pure silk glove with seams will stretch so much after it has been worn that it will get out of shape if the seams are not taken up. This is a simple matter. Turn the glove inside out and sew up each seam a mere trifle, but enough to make the glove fit smoothly. Try the glove on after this, and behold! it is as snug fitting and perfectly moulded to the hands as could be desired. It will not need taking up a second time.—N. Y. Tribune.

Another New Fad.

An instep pad is a new fad of those fair women who are so unfortunate as to be possessed of a "low bred" foot. It is simply a little linen pad fitted in place directly over where the instep should be but very often isn't. If such a fashion becomes general it will compel shoemakers to keep a stock of shoes with high instaps and the moderately low heels now demanded alike by good sense and fashion. It is next to impossible now to get a shoe with a high instep, except one made on what is known as the "Spanish last" and a ridiculously exaggerated heel is a part of the make-up of these shoes.

Quinsy troubled me for twenty years. Since I started using Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil have not had an attack. The Oil cures in three hours.

McCORMICK

Harvesting Machines!

this year. He tells us that the McCormick Company are obliged to make at the rate of one complete machine every minute of the day in order to supply their world-wide demand, the McCormick being almost as well known as the steppes of Russia, the plains of the Danube and in the Winter harvests of the Southern Hemisphere — Australia, South Africa and South America—as it is here.

He also showed us a fac-similie of the Gold Staata Medaille which the McCormick "Machine of Steel" won at the great Universal Exposition trials held at Vienna last Summer.

The McCormick catalogue, which, by the way, he keeps for gratuitous distribution, will repay careful reading.

When we take into consideration the fact that the McCormick Company sold 105,468 machines in 1890, the popularity of their Harvesters and Mowers and the capacity their mammoth works afford an interesting subject for contemplation.

DOBBS' CATARRH CURE.

Local and Internal Treatment.

In order to cure catarrh it is necessary to allay the inflammation of the irritated membrane with a soothing application, cleanse the head of the plugging mucous secretions, and heal the discharging ulcers. For cold in the head and nasal catarrh Dobbs' local treatment does the without the aid of snuff, douches or fumes. If the disease has extended downwards, affecting the bronchial tubes and lungs, digestion and blood, the internal treatment both removes from the system the scattered poison, and by its building-up properties assists nature in restoring the impaired parts. Send for our book treating on catarrh. FOSTER, MILBURN & CO., proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y. Sold in Wellsboro, Pa., by A. C. Roland.—February 5, 1891.

FASHIONABLE COLORS.

Nature Furnishes the Examples for the Various Changes.

"Did you ever think what is meant by a change of fashion?" said an importer to one of his customers. "It seems to over-practical people quite foolish and sometimes almost frivolous to wear one color one season and another the next. But did you ever try to think where we get our examples for this? Just stop a moment and realize that you need look no further than the nearest field which is in sight from your window or even to the grassy border along the walk. Do you see the pale tints of green? The soft pink of opening buds, the gray of the woolly overcoats in which the baby buds have been wrapped, and which they are now putting off? There is the pink and white of the peach, apple and cherry blossoms, the yellow of the cowslips, the blue green of the rye fields. And ladies of taste are calling for all these colors. Later they will wear red, olive green, brown, dust color and blue, the color of summer skies. The snow ball, spirea and fringed poppies, in their immaculate robes, furnish the daintiness of the picture and the dull days and fogs contribute the gray and smoke colors.

"Do you see what we follow when we change our colors? And if this is fashion, haven't we a very high authority for the custom? It has always been a mystery to me why we wear white in summer, when there is no end to the dust and dirt, and black and dark colors in winter, when the earth is covered with a green mantle and the dirt is either concealed or frozen solid. But those are among the inconsistencies of humanity. I notice, however, that there are a great many ladies who wear white house-dresses the year round. I think nothing can be prettier than white for indoor wear at any season of the year, and more attention seems to be given to thicker white goods than heretofore.

"For summer wear there is a growing demand for white linen dresses. Sheetings of various qualities are used for every-day dresses. Half-bleached Barnsley, trimmed with unbleached lace, makes admirable dresses. They are thus loosely finished and stylish, and laundering as well as comfortable and durable."—N. Y. Ledger.

Millinery Caprices.

In Summer there is always millinery, and this Summer there is a very great deal. Not so much in quantity, though in this respect there is no lack, but in regard to the intensity of the interest aroused. Hats in particular are enterprising. A broad, flat shape in white crinoline was one of the recent special displays. It was edged with a roulade of light green velvet ribbon, turned up at the back and trimmed with deftly tied bows of pearl colored ribbon shot with yellow, a peculiar combination, and made not less so by a brocaded design of dandelion flowers and green leaves.

A cobweb straw is one of the novelties.

It is very open in mesh, as indicated by its title, and one of the new examples rests on a bandeau of silver velvet, with a stem of bluebells peeping out from below. The back is turned up with bluebells, and there are strings of black velvet ribbon.

Geranium flowers are appearing in millinery. Pale pink came first but now we have white and salmon and scarlet. On Leghorn garden hats they find their best position.

Hats in two shades of blue are frequent. Pale blue mull will have dark blue, wing-like markings of the same stuff laid back in the brim. But upon the mull wings will be bird wings in gray, edged with blue.

Cornflowers are the present hobby, and the great gauze hats that always come forth at this season are trimmed with poppies and daisies, while ribbons of rainbow tints tie them up scarf-fashion.

MILLIONS OF STOCKINGS.

They Cost New York City Over Two Million Dollars a Year.

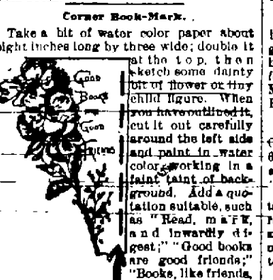
The women girls and children of New York wear some upon 3,000,000 pairs of stockings in a year, and that is putting the average only a trifle above three pairs for each. The difference in the price of stockings is so great, ranging from the unbleached cotton, which you buy for four cents a pair, up to the beautiful embroidered silk pair, made to match the costume and bringing $100, that it seems absurd to try to name an average price. But let me get at the totals in another way.

There are about 2,500,000 pairs of cotton, woolen and lisle thread stockings and socks bought in the city every year, and averaging these at twenty cents a pair, the lowest price being four cents and the highest $1.75 to $2, the sum paid for them would be just $500,000. This, I am assured by large dealers in hosiery, is quite below the mark. But consider the other 400,000 or 500,000 pairs of mixed silk and pure silk stockings and socks worn by rich girls and women, actresses and others who like to make a display of costly hosiery, and the figures are almost incredible. Their chief wear is pure silk, and the stockings range from $2.50 in plain color up to $20.

Add in this list the fancy, all-silk articles, these hand-embroidered with all kinds of artistically-wrought figures, produced in open work and done to match the costume, and the price ranges from $10 to $100. But put the average down to $3 a pair—and you can scarcely purchase an all-silk pair for less—and the bill for the 400,000 pairs is $1,200,000, which added to the half million dollars for the stockings worn by the poorer classes, amounts to $1,700,000. It would be no exaggeration to say that it costs New York City every year for socks and stockings for her female population a round $2,000,000, or enough to maintain nearly 20,000 persons, a whole city, for a year in food.—Philadelphia Press.

Corner Book-Marks.

Take a bit of water color paper about eight inches long by three wide; double it at the top, then sketch some dainty bit of flower or tiny child figure. When you have outlined it, cut it out carefully around the left side and paint in water color, working in a faint tint of background. Add a quotation suitable, such as "Read, mark, and inwardly digest;" "Good books are good friends;" "Books, like friends, should be few and well chosen;" "To marke ye place in ye booke." Then punch half a dozen holes down the right side, lace with a bit of silk cord or narrow ribbon, and you have a very cute book-mark, and slip on the corner of a page.



Styles in Glassware.

There are four shapes in goblets, the newest having a long cut stem, with the bowl in round cup shape. Those in Bacarat ware, with fine decorations, are much admired. In the same pattern, or "sets" as they are called, is the champagne, claret, sherry, wine, cordial glass and tumbler. There are two shapes in champagne glasses, the saucer with a long stem, and the high small round tumbler. The Sultana pattern is very showy in glassware, the Eckeson being another that receives favor.

Plain and iridescent glass are favored by some, and these are very beautiful on the plain, satin-finished table cover. Colored table-glass is not considered "good form" just at present, although colored glass finger-bowls are not altogether out. Lemonade cups are fashionable, and these, with pitchers, claret jugs and decanters, follow the designs in other glassware. There are four sizes in decanters, the sizes selected according to the wine used. Glass egg-cups are again brought forward and there are new ideas in vinegar, oil and catsup bottles.

Candlesticks come in cut or pressed glass, adding greatly to the appearance of the table. A pretty style, two feet high, has a small lamp with fancy globe at the top, and one and two and three and five candles.

THREE ORIENTAL APOLOGUES.

Ogre and Wife—A Panther Which Looked—Self-Control—A God's Favor.

There was once an ogre, not very rich who had a very pretty goul to his wife. One night on returning home he said to her: "I have brought you a handsome young man for supper." The ghoul, however, privately killed a pig and served it up. Stung by remorse, "Wretch that I am!" cried she, "you are a wicked man to tempt me to make way with an innocent youth!" This she had, in fact, done, and secreted him in a churn. When the ogre had well eaten and dropped off for what he called his forty winks she anointed his eyes with the juice of an herb, which threw him into a profound slumber of some weeks' duration. During this time she entertained the young man with sprightly conversation, innocent games, and high feeding. Then she awakened the ogre and explained how she had deemed it best to fatten the youth. The husband thought his wife judged right. Then they supped merrily together on the flesh of another pig.

True happiness in the married state finds a sure foundation in the entire truthfulness on the one side that wins unquestioning trust on the other. It will not have escaped the observant reader that this ghoul told her husband the exact
